The projects are proposed as part of the state's 14-month extension of the HSIP, which expires at the end of the month. The state originally received funds in January to continue a program that helps states with safety projects related to improving the state's roads and bridges. The program allows states to apply for grants that they can use to improve the performance of their roads, bridges and other infrastructure. "This program has enabled our state to identify potential projects that may help Colorado improve its roads, bridges and highways," said Greg Moore, CDOT deputy commissioner. "We know that HSIP funding is an effective tool to increase awareness of Colorado's transportation challenges and improve our state's roads, bridges and other infrastructure." Moore said the state is currently working with the U.S. Department of Transportation's Federal Highway Administration on the project evaluation process. Once the program is officially reopened, the state has until the end of the month to submit the HSIP grant applications. The three potential projects are in Logan, Weld and Mesa counties, and each project would cost between $8 and $10 million. In addition to the project's estimated cost, the program requires that the state conduct a project evaluation. Moore said CDOT will work with the state's three congressional districts — from Logan, Weld and 2d92ce491b
