Everyone from the president on down is talking about the Republican health care bill. But we'd like to know your thoughts on the same. Should all Obamacare taxes be eliminated in a bill that repeals the law? Should the bill scale back Medicaid? Should it end the Affordable Care Act's individual mandate, making a return to health insurance only for the elderly and/or the poor? What would you do? Vote in our poll or chat with us in the comments. We want to know what you think. Please enter your name and email below and click the "Vote" button below. Read Next The House of Representatives is voting on a number of bills to fund the government through September 2019. This bill would partially repeal the Affordable Care Act. Read about which health care reforms are in this bill. To be clear, the Better Care Reconciliation Act, the legislation that's expected to be voted on in the House next week, repeals the Affordable Care Act's individual mandate and it would also prevent the Medicaid expansion in the ACA from taking effect in 2019. Here's what that would mean for you. The Senate's version of the health care bill would not have the same provisions to repeal the individual mandate or cut Medicaid. If the Senate bill becomes law, the Medicaid expansion will still take effect in 2019. As of right now, if the Senate health care bill passes, 24 million Americans could lose coverage, according to the Congressional Budget Office. The Senate's version of the health care bill would repeal the Affordable Care Act's individual mandate, which has the effect of gradually raising premiums for those who buy insurance on their own.
