What's New in the Rootkit Remover?

Windows 3.1 by MS-DOS Before attempting to disinfect the system, Rootkit Remover will report if it detects any known threat on the computer. In a major setback for Indian interests in Afghanistan, Pakistan has refused to allow the United Nations to be the lead body to mediate between India and Pakistan over the Himalayan border issue. The move came just days after the two nuclear-armed neighbours, who are engaged in an acrimonious standoff over border hostilities in their shared region, clashed in the Keran sector on the Line of Control. Pakistan said India had failed to convince it on the need for UN mediation to end the impasse. Indian officials say they have lodged a strong protest with the UN over Pakistan's move. India had approached the UN as well as the Organisation of Islamic Cooperation (OIC) in early March after its envoy was summoned to the Pakistani Foreign Office and told that Islamabad will not agree to any UN-brokered talks with New Delhi. According to Indian officials, Pakistan told its representative at the UN that it was not ready to have India as a "key negotiator" for the issues, which include Kashmir and terrorism. After that, it was decided at the UN that the matter would be taken up by the OIC. But India decided that it needed the involvement of the UN on the issues. The Indian envoy, Ajit Doval, conveyed this to Pakistani officials when he met them in New York last week. Indian officials say Pakistan is trying to use the OIC route because it is embarrassed by the presence of India's representative at the UN. Pakistan's Minister of Foreign Affairs Shah Mehmood Qureshi said on Wednesday that the OIC could not be a "suitable platform" for such a dialogue. "In Pakistan, we have a policy of live and let live approach," he told a conference in Brussels, and added that he had discussed the matter with his Indian counterpart Sushma Swaraj when she was here. "It is clear that if somebody in the UN has to be there as a third party, that person cannot be India or Pakistan.” Another issue between India and Pakistan is the Kashmiri separatist movement. According to Pakistani officials, India has not accepted that the two sides could sit down and talk about Kashmir in the context of New Delhi and Islamabad. Pakistan has given several deadlines to India to stop cross-border violence and to withdraw its troops before talks can start. India has objected to the deadlines and categorically stated that New Delhi would not withdraw its troops from Indian-administered Kashmir until Islamabad takes action against terrorist outfits based in the country. Meanwhile, Pakistani officials have said that President Mamnoon Hussain has written to Prime Minister Narendra Modi to seek a bilateral dialogue on
