Taking photos A photo is captured by a lens and an image sensor. The lens gathers light and focuses it onto the sensor. In digital photography, the image sensor is a flat, square piece of silicon that transforms the light waves into a color image. Sometimes, it's also known as a CCD, for charge-coupled device. (Filling out the terminology of photographers is part of the fun.) The parts of the sensor, including the image sensor itself, are called a `_frame_` or `_image plane_`. You may want to use both a lens and a sensor in your camera because a lens on a compact camera is more likely to magnify a photo and make it larger and the image plane is smaller on a camera without a lens or in a point-and-shoot camera. (For more on the various parts of the camera, check out the later sidebar, "Seeing different parts of a camera," for a brief review.)

Journalists, anti-Trump professionals and their allies scoured the web Saturday to document instances of access to President Trump's White House being limited. One of the most notorious instances of this occurred Sunday afternoon when Trump, having been briefed on North Korea's missile test, abruptly exited the White House for a trip to view the annual farm show in Harrisburg, Pa., where he stood cheerfully beside a young Korean child in a dress and a pig's costume. The Times reported that an outlet calling itself "independent fact checkers for the White House," "fact checkers for the media and for the public," and "senior Democrats on the Senate Judiciary Committee" found the incident "quite telling." Joining the fact checkers was the American Civil Liberties Union, which tweeted an image of Trump and the child and said, "Evaluating fact checking efforts in the Age of Trump? Meet the White House photo op with a child and the President." An advertising executive asked me today if I wanted to participate in an essay contest being organized by the last remaining pro-Israel lobby in New York. The deadline for the submission is this Friday. The prize is $5,000, and I'm in. The contest, the subject of which is "Israel and American Jewry: What do you see as the most significant disconnect between the two peoples?" is organized by the American Israel Education Foundation. The AJEF is a small organization with the same staffers on board since its inception in 1978. I'm being asked to address the "most significant" disconnect between American Jews and Israel. This is an absurd question. What distinguishes Jewish culture from any other is the nature and character of Jewish governance. Specifically, the character of that governance is mandated by the country's first constitution, the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution, which is found in the U.S. Bill of Rights. The entire Bill of Rights, including the most fundamental rights of personal and religious freedom, was formed by Jews. So it is only fair, in a culture infused with those values, that Jews should address the question, what is the most significant disconnect between the interests of the Israeli and Jewish peoples? Without question, the most significant disconnect between the interests of the Jewish and Israeli peoples is Israel's violation of the United States Constitution and of

Effects of i.v. IgG on local tissue reaction, type-1 cytokine response and bacterial clearance of oropharyngeal skin abscess in mice. IgG activates phagocytosis, activates complement and therefore may modulate the immune response. The effects of i.v. IgG on the local tissue reaction, cytokine (IL-1, TNF-alpha and IFN-gamma) production and bacterial elimination from the oropharynx of mice with skin abscess were assessed. The IgG dose was varied from 8.3 to 131.3 mg/kg, and up to 16 mg/kg IgG was well tolerated. The IgG dose producing 100% survival of the skin infection was found to be 131.3 mg/kg. This dose induced a local tissue reaction, but not elevated pro-inflammatory cytokine production. Lower doses of IgG produced only mild reactions. This is the first demonstration that i.v. IgG does not enhance local tissue reaction, or induce a pro-inflammatory cytokine response. A dose of 16 mg/kg IgG (in the late phase of the skin infection) induced oropharyngeal secretion, but the amounts (neutrophil counts and TNF-alpha concentration) were not significant. 16 mg/kg IgG, given on day 4 (during the course of the infection), reduced bacterial elimination on day 5, but not on day 7. A dose of 8.3 mg/kg IgG administered on day 4 was less effective, and gave an attenuated tissue reaction. However, this dose increased bacterial elimination. Therefore, when an infectious insult is evident, an early dose of 8.3 mg/kg IgG may be beneficial. Interaction of analogs of chloroquine with the mitochondrial ADP/ATP carrier. Correlation with binding of the drugs to mitochondrial preparations. The ability of three analogs of chloroquine to inhibit the transport of ADP/ATP by the mitochondrial ADP/ATP carrier was examined and compared to the binding of the analogs to intact (unlabeled) rat liver mitochondria. Mitochondria isolated from rat liver were incubated at 25 degrees C in medium containing 2 mM oxidized glutathione, 50 microM rho-nitrophenyl malonate and 10 microM orthonitrophenyl tetrazolium. Chloroquine and its analogs diquat and 9-amino
