Menu Healing from the Pit of Despair Self-acceptance is an elusive dream. We strive to be kind to ourselves, but our self-image is already compromised and our minds are so constantly running on overdrive that we have a nearly impossible time getting comfortable with ourselves. With more and more attacks directed at the self, it becomes more and more difficult to even wrap our mind around what is needed to be accepting of ourselves. We see ourselves as a series of flaws that need to be fixed. We see our lives in a way that is totally twisted and wrong. We feel that we will be remade or that we are the source of our own misery. Acceptance is not easy. It is not something that comes naturally to us. It is a process, a journey. One that requires attention and dedication to it. It is also something that must be learned, in the sense that it is something you have to teach yourself. The truth of the matter is that self-acceptance is difficult and you can't expect to magically pick it up. It is going to require work, and that work has to be made clear to you. It is also going to require dedication to the process, and a willingness to break your bad habits and embrace some new and better ones. You have to start by accepting yourself as you are. You have to make the choice to accept yourself right now. You have to make a commitment to improve yourself in areas that need improvement, in order to make yourself a better person. You have to choose to change, to heal, to be well. You have to choose to break the cycle of pain and self-loathing and let yourself be happy. That is acceptance. Acceptance of the true nature of ourselves. Acceptance of the fact that we are imperfect, that we have problems and flaws. Acceptance of the fact that we are not flawless and that we are broken. That we will make mistakes, we will fail, we will hurt people. Acceptance of the fact that no matter how much we try to improve, we are not perfect and we can never be perfect. Acceptance of the fact that you are imperfect and that your imperfection is just part of the vast perfection that you are. Acceptance of the fact that you cannot
