For the REACT questionnaire, a shorter duration of the previous illness and the presence of daytime symptoms were significantly associated with higher level of HRQOL, while none of these factors were associated with overall symptom scores. Interestingly, the presence of nighttime symptoms was associated with higher anxiety scores, indicating a higher level of worry. In general, the effect of significant depressive symptoms (as measured by the QIDS-S) on HRQOL in the CF population is of moderate effect size \[[@ref29]\], while a correlation of low to moderate effect size was found between daytime and nighttime symptoms and HRQOL for the REACT questionnaire \[[@ref30]\]. With regard to limitations of the current study, it has to be pointed out that this is a multi-center cross-sectional study and several patients had to be excluded because of significant cognitive problems, which could have influenced the results. During clinical care at the CF centers, a number of patients have coexisting respiratory and gastrointestinal disorders which can also contribute to impact their HRQOL \[[@ref25]\]. During the clinical care, however, there is a risk of seasonal variation on HRQOL, as patients tend to decline in HRQOL in winter. The current data were collected during the season of low temperature. Compared to other studies, the involvement of study centers from the eastern part of the Netherlands

Jun 11, 2016 Cybershield programs Cyberlink Powerdirector and Cyberlink Vision are used by software developers to check if your user has the appropriate software installed on a computer. This is also known as 'codec activation'. This is a simple thing. Almost any consumer has these programs on a laptop, like an Asus, i3, i5, i7, iBook, Mac Pro, Macbook, PC, Ultrabook, Android, iOS, whatever. Powerdirector uses internal tools to verify the appropriate plugins and codecs are installed on the computer. If the software is never used, it should never be activated again. Malware often deactivates these programs to prevent the detection and removal of potentially unwanted software. You will get an error screen if the software is deactivated: See the screen shot below: What to do is simple. Navigate to the Cybershield Settings box. (Press button and choose Settings.) Choose the option "List all Applications" (top of the window). In the window that pops up, use your mouse to scroll through all of the programs listed on your computer. (Windows users may access this from their Start menu.) Look for Powerdirector and Cyberlink Vision. (You will see another tab for "Powerdirector Version" and "Cyberlink Vision Version" down the left side of the screen.) If you don't see it, on the bottom of the screen, click the Check Version To Activate button. Here is what the final screen should look like: Powerdirector uses the Activation Wizard to help you get back to the Powerdirector application: Program or Codec Already Registered Press Start to return to the Cybershield Settings box. Choose the option "Cyberlink Powerdirector Version" (top of the window). In the window that pops up, use your mouse to scroll through all of the programs listed on your computer. (You will see a tab for "Cyberlink Powerdirector Version" on the left side of the screen.) If you don't see it, on the bottom of the screen, click the Check Version To Activate button. CODEC Activation PowerDirector uses several internal tools to verify the appropriate plugins and codecs are installed on the computer. If the software is never used, it should never be activated again. Malware 570a42141b
