You can download Adobe Photoshop CS4 from the CD that accompanied this book, but I suggest you use the boxed version available on the CD-ROM instead because it offers much more. Playing with the different views of Photoshop Photoshop is a very powerful program, so it has a lot of different view modes and tools to enable you to operate on a photo. For instance, you can view your photo as layers (the default view for most people), as a composite (a.k.a. clipping path, a.k.a. watermark) image, or in a preview. Here's a quick reference for the different types of views in Photoshop. I talk more about the various views and modes throughout this chapter. Layer view (refer to Figure 2-1): With this view, you can see all your layers, choose which one you want to work on, and edit it. You can toggle between the different view modes by using the View drop-down list on the top-left of the workspace (refer to Figure 2-2). Just click the View drop-down list and choose your preference. Figure 2-1: The default view is showing all the layers in the image. Figure 2-2: Click the View drop-down list to toggle between various view modes. Layer view: With the Layers or Layer Tools command (the green eye icon) on top of the image, you can toggle between layer view and regular view. Just click the green eye to show the layers, and click the eye to hide them. Layer stacks: When working with layers, you can arrange them in stacks so that you can see the individual layers without their parents. Click the layer stacks button in the workspace and select which stack you want to see. (See the following sections for more on stacks.) When you're creating layers, you can use Adobe's Auto-Blend Layers feature (refer to Figure 2-2). Click the Auto-Blend Layers icon to turn on this feature, which blends all layers on top of one another. Non-Photoshop View: This view gives you an overview of your image. In addition to your layers, you can see your histogram and an area called info from where you can view the image's resolution and more. The preview that appears in this view mode (refer to Figure 2-3) is a wireframe representation of the

The BBC has apologised for its coverage of the 2011 riots. The corporation was widely criticised for its coverage of the week-long disturbances in August 2011. The Independent Press Standards Organisation said it accepted the BBC's apology for its coverage of the riots, but ruled a failure to explain the impact of the riots on those caught up in the disturbances "was a significant failure". The BBC's director of news standards Damian Collins said he accepted the ruling. "I accept the ruling to the extent that it is right and the BBC is sorry for the error which has been found," he said. He said the BBC would review the decision to decide whether it would appeal against the ruling. 'Toxic threat' The controversy over the BBC's coverage of the riots has been simmering for more than two years since the BBC Trust ruled the broadcaster breached its editorial guidelines. The judgement followed the Newsnight programme's decision to show rioters throwing an Asian man out of the window of a car. "The editor's decision to broadcast images of rioters throwing a man out of a window was not only a shocking and distressing incident but was also highly inflammatory and played a significant role in fuelling the toxic threat of violence in the days that followed," the report concluded. "Newsnight's editor broke the BBC's editorial guidelines in providing a platform for expression of inflammatory and irresponsible views, and was therefore in breach of clause 1 of the Editorial Guidelines." In February 2014, the BBC Trust upheld the Newsnight editor's right to broadcast the controversial picture at the time, but criticised the subsequent coverage of it on news programmes. The corporation, which apologised at the time and said it accepted the ruling, said the outcome reflected an "intense media debate" about the issue during the riots. Stalled investigations During the August 2011 riots, the House of Commons debated whether the government had failed to investigate the growing number of black people who were dying at an alarming rate in police custody - despite a series of deaths at police stations across England. The BBC's coverage included the deaths of Kenji McArthur, in West Yorkshire, Lee Masters, in Haringey, and Manasseh Usuante, at Stoke Newington police station. The director of standards, David Lea, said the BBC had an obligation to report on the riots in a way that was factually accurate, and a "vastly greater"

Coastal Geoparks and Dockspots Coastal Geopark is a body of people, organisations and institutions who promote the importance of natural, cultural and maritime heritage of the coasts of southern Brazil, within the frame of the National Council for Scientific and Technological Development (CNPq), Ministry of Science and Technology - MCT. The original objectives of Coastal Geoparks were the preservation and promotion of the coastal space, through the greening of the sea and the coastal areas. The coastal areas would gradually recover from the negative effects of industrial exploitation. Coastal Geoparks have a network of 119 marine and terrestrial sites, four marine parks, one marine region, one archipelago and an offshore biological reserve. Eighteen of these areas are part of the list of UNESCO World Heritage Sites: Agua do Artesanato The historic centre of São João da Barra, São Paulo State Barra da Tijuca and Sepetiba Itamaraca, Santa Catarina The Matura Natural Reserve Praia de Seba, Espírito Santo Sacristénia Seixal, Setúbal The Sosúa Archipelago and Benfica Lagoon The Sosúa Archipelago, Natal, Rio Grande do Norte State Trecadilho, Ribeira Grande, Rio Grande do Norte State Biology The offshore Doca do Carrapatelo Biological Reserve, owned by the National Institute of Amazonian Research (INPA), was declared a UNESCO World Heritage site in 1996. It has already been included in the Amazon Biosphere Reserve. The reserve is located in the waters of Carrapatelo bay, about 60 km northeast of Porto Nacional city. It is a very important breeding area for the endangered giant manatee and is one of the largest nesting and foraging areas for the critically endangered green turtle (Chelonia mydas) in the southern Brazil. Many new species of flora and fauna have been discovered in this reserve; it has huge woodlands and a wonderful forest of the Atlantic Forest - a Brazilian ecosystem threatened by deforestation. Dockspots The Brazilian Institute of Geography and Statistics (IBGE) and the CNPq - MCT are in charge of the Geoparks and Dockspots Program
