IK Multimedia's 2019 software update version 6.2.1 was released with support for iOS and macOS apps along with new keyboard shortcuts and enhancements in Amplitube, the Drum Browser, Recycle Bin, and Tinnitus. Additionally, the company announced the support of the Audio Units bundle in 2019 and a new MIDI controller support for iOS and macOS apps. The company also added an Alt-Tab history and a new, end-to-end crash-resistant recording solution in their Akai Studio X Pro app. In addition, IK Multimedia announced a license key activation system. IK Multimedia introduced a $79.99 upgrade to its Studio X app called Studio X Pro (formerly called Presonus Studio X) that is available for macOS and iOS. This Studio X app is a central hub for many of IK Multimedia's other Studio apps, such as the Drum Browser and the Amplitube VST, RTAS and Audio Units applications. Studio X Pro features a redesigned interface and a new "touch panel" that displays information about users' sessions, recording preferences and audio levels. Users can now share their favorite settings with other users, adjust the relative levels of the studio's headphone and speaker outputs for convenient mixing and monitor calibration, and most importantly, access all the menu items. Electro Harmonix announced the release of its Mercury Firewire MIDI controller for iPad and iPhone. The Mercury Firewire MIDI Controller features two Firewire 800 ports, and can function as a standalone MIDI controller or as a companion to a Mac or Windows computer. Users can manage and route MIDI messages to and from the Mercury MIDI Controller using IK Multimedia's Amplitube software.
