Both countries have imposed tough restrictions on foreign travel since the outbreak in west Africa started in March. Merkel said she agreed that the restrictions were necessary for safety reasons but rejected a plan by British Prime Minister David Cameron and French President François Hollande to step up aviation screening. "Until the virus has been contained we should say that the measures taken by Britain and France will have to be carried out, including air traffic restrictions," Merkel told a news conference with visiting U.S. President Barack Obama in Berlin. "We cannot just let anything happen," she added. "I agree with the British and French position that there must be restrictions... but at the same time I think we should not have one country taking it upon itself to make decisions about the management of the situation," she said. Merkel dismissed suggestions that German airports could also be closed, saying only individual cases posed a risk. She said the country had introduced new safety measures since 9/11 that could help authorities handle any case. "It would be irresponsible of Germany to stop its own security forces from doing their job," she said. "But a pandemic in the world, in any case, also has to be taken seriously." Speaking earlier on Thursday in the French city of Lyon, Hollande said he had told Obama that although safety was paramount, Europe needed to react "differently" to the U.S. and British actions. He declined
