RT Journal Article SR Electronic(1) A1 Martinets, J. A1 Bawden, A. A1 Hanley, R. T1 Should age be a risk factor when treating solitary pulmonary nodules? JF The Journal of Thoracic Disease JO The Journal of Thoracic Disease SP 483 VO 49 IS 9 AB One of the many problems in evaluating lung cancer is determining whether a nodule is malignant and, if so, whether it is stage I or stage II. In most cases, the only way to make this determination is by biopsy. Among the risk factors for lung cancer is age. Several studies have shown that average age-adjusted incidence of lung cancer increases from 10% in men and 8% in women in the fifth decade to 25% in men and 16% in women in the seventieth decade. These studies also demonstrate that the age of onset is earlier in current smokers than in former smokers. If a patient is older than age sixty, he or she should be referred to a lung cancer specialist for evaluation. Solitary pulmonary nodules in the elderly population are often attributable to an inflammatory disease. However, a majority of cases in which pulmonary nodules are discovered also have cancer in other sites. Fifty-one per cent of patients with a single nodule on X-ray are found to have pulmonary cancer. Between 6% and 18% of solitary pulmonary nodules are cancerous. As a rule, malignant solitary pulmonary nodules do not regress, although they may contain calcifications and become less visible on subsequent X-ray films. Most are not resected because of their size, location or resectability. If a patient with a solitary pulmonary nodule which is only 1 centimeter or less in diameter is over age sixty, then follow-up of such a patient should be by CT scan yearly rather than by X-ray.Q: How to create an image with a gradient background with an animated fade in I've been unable to figure out how to create an animated image like in the link below. I assume a gif or an animated png would work better. Any ideas? The animation: A: Here's a quick example in CSS/SVG. The photo fade is used only to get a nice out-of-the-box result. I didn't created any animation, this is

What's New in the?

The Jumbotron in the background seemed to tell a lot of the story (minus the virus) without any editing. The Washington Capitals were in a tight game against the Boston Bruins, but it didn't seem like either team could seal the deal. I wonder if the carping on message boards about the fan experience at the game during the playoffs has actually affected ticket sales for the final games. Then things changed. Alex Ovechkin, the best player in hockey, flew around the net trying to score a goal. He was successful. The Bruins couldn't match the effort. Thus, the Capitals walked into the final two minutes in Boston with the Stanley Cup in sight. The jumbotron aired in real time, constantly telling you that an overtime period was possible. Clearly, there was no shortage of emotion on the ice. The cameras captured Ovechkin skidding across the ice to knock in a rebound of his own shot into the net. The emotion and excitement of a generation was on display right before your eyes. That's exactly what the Stanley Cup finals are about. Not hockey statistics or records or achievement. It's about the heart and the people and the pure sport. That's why we're outside of the arena on Independence Mall in Philadelphia. It's about us. The Philadelphia Flyers are in the final Stanley Cup playoffs. The Capitals are not. The Flyers are not among the top eight teams in the NHL. The Capitals are. The Capitals are in the midst of a tremendous amount of adversity this season. They're being investigated by the NHL in regards to tampering because Karl Alzner offered an autographed Senators jersey to a fan last season. They're presently involved in a lawsuit regarding the contract that allowed the team to trade Ovechkin. We are not in the midst of rampant violence at Phillips Arena. The NHL is the best big-time sport in America right now. Everything about the league is bigger than hockey. The television ratings are higher. The postseason is on par with the NFL playoffs. The Conference Finals are a billion times bigger than anything happening in the NHL playoffs. Last year's Stanley Cup finals drew in the largest television audience to date in American sports. The final two games against the Kings included a combined capacity crowd of over 110,000 people. Now, it's fair to question whether the Capitals' players can generate the same enthusiasm as they did last season. They've
