“This is the first time we’ve ever been able to use real movement data at such a high level to power our game,” said Oliver Halbrook, FIFA Editor at EA SPORTS. “The impact on FIFA and gaming in general is going to be huge.” These players were chosen for their professional status and reputation as world-class football players, including Lionel Messi, Xavi, Diego Maradona, Wayne Rooney, Zlatan Ibrahimovic and Gerd Müller, among others. They will be the first players to utilize the data-driven game engine to power its gameplay. “Our vision is to give developers and editors the power to explore and experiment even further in-game,” said Mike Young, FIFA Lead Designer at EA Sports. “The HyperMotion technology will help make this vision become a reality.” In addition, to address feedback from last year’s game, FIFA has launched a brand-new Player Intelligence system that analyzes player and team movements in-game and offers player reactions in real time. A new set of tools called: A.I. DEMANDS, enables players to generate specific controls and shape the action on the pitch, creating more chaos and variety on the field. New Player Controls FIFA 22 introduces a set of new controls and enhancements designed to make the game more intuitive and create more realistic gameplay and situations. Pitch-side controls are designed to intuitively guide players in and around the pitch: this year, players can drag and drop the ball in the air with one hand, then put the ball back into the spot or kick it in the direction of their choice with the other. With new Move controls, players can move down the pitch by pulling the joystick right and left. It's player power on the ball: Players can gain and lose speed in real-time, creating different levels of power when they attack the ball and different levels of fatigue when they stop and stay in one spot. On the defense, players can push the ball up the pitch with new techniques such as: Kick and Push, which are used to get closer to the ball; dribble and slide, which allows players to control the direction of their run; and Trap, which is used to trap the ball against the player's body as they are moving in an attempt to gain distance.

New Ideas: That smooth flowing defending that makes for a more open game? Well EA have taken notice and added a sweeping mechanic for defensive players, they'll perform a sliding tackle from any angle to snuff out any attacking ambitions. The idea is to make to knock on effect in the game more open, adding to the flow of the game and helping the team's main man hug more opponents. A new game mechanic that I bet you've only seen in FIFA, the new X: Ratio - Powerful, well placed positioning that can lead to scoring or stopping attacks

Vantage - Tiered player ratings based on position and ability Both work together as the Vantage rating determines the Zones that a player falls into, giving that X:BAB score, as well as the length and power of your player's pass. Alongside these two new features, a brand new defensive tackling mechanic, the side step, defenders will be able to execute a staggering move to break away with the ball. Another new feature is the wall, the concept is very similar to that of wall passes, but with far less animation if you want to kick a wall pass. On top of all this EA are looking to further raise the bar by looking to bring in the passing element, players can now move their passing options around the pitch, increasing player's ability to be positioned on a more amenable angle. You also get to choose your defensive lines in the dribbling and shooting modes, with players now being able to attack and defend in unison. This is the dribbling mode, where you get to attack from any angle you wish and the opposition will have to keep up with you, if you play your cards right you can get in on goal or shoot the goal, but if they have the run of the pitch they can play you off the ball. To add to this, a brand new engine has been put in place, boasting up to three times the simulation speed and over 10 times the physics when compared to the engine used in FIFA 21, with team fatigue being taken into account to improve the weight of matches. That smooth flowing defending that makes for a more open game? Well EA have taken notice and added a sweeping mechanic for defensive players, they'll perform a sliding tackle from any angle to snuff out any
