In FIFA 20, the increased player-to-player contact presented some issues for the game's physics, particularly over a short distance. The aim with FIFA 22 is to smooth out the issue by increasing the player-to-player contact while maintaining a fluid physics model, allowing the game to move away from the action of its predecessor while still providing an accurate simulation. With more players involved in each action, especially in situations where there are no referees to separate them, there will be more collisions and more player "bumping" at both ends of the pitch. Players' grappling and fending off opponents has never been easier, but with more contact comes more pushback and the need to react appropriately to a defender's push or tackle. With more players involved in each action, especially in situations where there are no referees to separate them, there will be more collisions and more player "bumping" at both ends of the pitch. The accuracy of this high-impact collision has been improved in FIFA 22 by using an enhanced physics system, which incorporates bespoke scoring data. This technique gives players more detail in both the way they affect each other and in their ability to react with a more natural player model. This is coupled with a new tackling model that improves the accuracy of players grappling and fending off each other. Players now have the ability to push or grapple their opponent, bringing a stronger physical element to the game. "The new physical aspects of player collision and contact will create a more realistic and aggressive gameplay, especially in higher profile and open-space situations," said Kai Bedell, Creative Director at EA Sports. "With more players involved in each action, especially in situations where there are no referees to separate them, there will be more collisions and more player 'bumping' at both ends of the pitch. Players' grappling and fending off opponents has never been easier, but with more contact comes more pushback and the need to react appropriately to a defender's push or tackle. We have also introduced a whole series of new gameplay animations, including new player moves that enhance the playing style and identity of each player. Additionally, we have given you more options to control the pace of the match, whilst retaining the realistic feel that make FIFA a favourite amongst sports fans. In FIFA 22 you can play online with up to 32

What's new:

- FIFA 22 introduces “HyperMotion Technology,” which leverages motion capture data collected from players’ running, playing, and attacking actions during a complete, high-intensity match. The dynamic physics of this higher-fidelity intelligence are then applied to the entirety of the gameplay experience - from passing to tackling, to ball control and ball movement. This radically changes how every player and every action interact with the ball, both on and off the ball. This enables nuanced play styles and new skills that were not even imagined only a few years ago. Depth and efficiency of control give full fidelity to the players without affecting the intensity and realism of a match.
- AI is used throughout the game to make the sport of soccer even more authentic. New tactics, formations and changes to the way players think and influence the game allow the AI algorithms to adjust and evolve across the seasons and tournaments to ensure an unprecedented level of realism.
- Players now react in a more realistic manner to fouls and challenge for the ball.
- For the first time ever in any EA SPORTS game, the Ultimate Team mode introduces the new EverTouch system - a completely new way to connect with and play your favourite EA SPORTS fantasy players.
- FIFA 22 introduces a completely new 3D camera system, and 3D Player models that display more accurate foot positioning.
- A new foot angle that now conforms to the player’s reality more closely. The new camera system and the much smoother animations give a more realistic 3D look and feel. Players will run more fluidly, play and pass the ball more gracefully and achieve new heights of expression in their gameplay. Players will also be able to naturally dink the ball in one hand to shoot with the other, or stab a long pass with ease.
