Parental experience with child-directed food for children with cancer: an exploratory study. Cancer in childhood is a difficult time for both children and their parents. It is important to document the range of emotions experienced by parents. One way to investigate parents' experiences is to study their own feelings of the experience during the cancer diagnosis, treatment, and recurrence. An exploratory phenomenological study design using a phenomenological inquiry approach was used. Ten parents of children with cancer participated. The overarching theme was a heightened awareness of parenting and a desire to take care of the child. Five second-level themes were identified: I can't let go; can't understand how you can survive; I'm so attached; I need to explain; and I need to know. This study illustrates how parents experience the perceived challenges of childhood cancer. It also shows how parents' wishes to provide optimal care for their child during the course of treatment and recovery are not fulfilled. The theory of parental coping in chronic disease suggests that parents attempt to protect their loved one, whether from themselves or society. If parents feel unable to do this, they need to find a balance between protecting themselves and their child and protecting their child from a parent who feels unable to cope. Google collects advertising data to sell to advertisers with the goal of targeting ads to people who are more likely to buy the products advertised. It collects data on those who buy things as well as those who don't. This allows the advertising company to monitor what is and isn't popular, and to provide a customized ad that suits your (and your friends') interests. Advertisers can target ads on Google's search page with more precision than on most web sites. You can choose to receive ads for related products or services based on what you have searched for before. Of course, Google may be using your search activity not simply to optimize for advertisements but to enhance its search algorithms so that more relevant searches are shown. And, like most other web sites, Google is collecting data to better understand your interests so that it can tailor ads to your needs, including your online shopping habits and browsing habits. While all of that information is anonymous, it is still a valuable asset to Google. Read more

“ What does ‘doped at the knees’ mean? ” In the early 1900s, the English cyclist Eddie Hahn first said “doped at the knees.” Then in 1933, Jesse Owens was more well known for saying “Hitler has doped at the knees.” In 1965, the phrase was first printed in the sports press. It refers to a practice of taking drugs to keep athletes from competitors. In fact, the reason why so many people are attracted to doing this is because there are many ways to utilize the strength of drugs; the one right solution is by consuming steroids. Steroids are powerful substances that can perform a lot of tasks in the body. As with any other supplements, one must know the right dosage amount, otherwise, this can cause many health problems. Knowing what does “doping at the knees” mean? For most of the athletes, this was not the first idea in mind. They have considered many ways on how to dope themselves. The most commonly used method is to consume the goods in the market, these items can be available in any form such as tablets, powders or injections. How to use doped at the knees? Users can simply take these substances orally, depending on the health condition of an athlete. This method is easy as one can consume the drugs directly without any injection. There is no need to be scared of the chemical content since the concentration of the drugs are in the form of pure form. These products are good and effective to many people who want to dope themselves. There is no lack of alternatives to them. The problem with steroids use is their packaging, and this will not be in any form that is easy to sniff and or open. They are designed to look appealing and one of the easiest ways to get rid of them is to flush them. Are you looking for doped at the knees meaning? This is a common question that people are looking for. This is used when we want to get rid of drugs or when the person is taking drugs. This is also the one that defines what the drug is used for. The expression was first introduced in the 1960s and became more widely used to refer to sports doping in the 1970s and 1980s. The drug was first made popular in the mid-1920s when physicians and pharmacists began identifying a series of clinical conditions that were treated with the synthetic steroid that was developed by S
