Photographer Darren Friedland captured the footage of the Marines during an exercise on the border of the Netherlands and Belgium in July. Friedland told Military Times, “I was told by the U.S. military that the press were welcome. “They were planning to start working on the exercise [but] it was obvious something like this would happen,” he continued. “I’m sure these soldiers are haunted by it.” Watch: The footage shows a group of U.S. Marines from Headquarters and Service Company, 1st Reconnaissance Battalion, 4th Marine Regiment, reacting to the shooting at a concert venue in Las Vegas on Oct. 1. That’s why we’re there. And we try to do that in any way we can.” Friedland said the Marines “seemed grateful” to share the footage and were proud to be the first to capture the scene. “We spoke about what happened in this place and how the shooting did affect our life and how we were affected by it and I know I was glad to hear that they were as affected as I was to see the dead people,” Friedland said. “It really affected the whole group.” Friedland released the footage Wednesday.
