The Road to Mackinac Island. The Road to Mackinac Island is a road trip novel by the American writer Carl Hiaasen. The book was published in 2005 by Harper Collins and won the International Dublin Literary Award. Plot Mackinac Island, off the northwestern coast of the Upper Peninsula of Michigan, is a small tourist destination with no resident population and an annual visitor count of about 20,000. Its only tourist attraction, the Straits of Mackinac, is a narrow strait that separates Michigan from the Upper Peninsula of Wisconsin. In this novel, the main character, Laura, moves from Miami to Michigan, hoping to find a new job. She goes to Mackinac Island in search of a job, but finds that the police are now guarding the island's beaches against a serial rapist and murder who is rumored to be on the island. Laura joins the police on the lookout for the criminal, eventually ending up at the headquarters of the Michigan State Police, and discovering that the police are now themselves being targeted for harassment by the same serial killer.

Characters Laura Longmire: A Miami woman who arrives in the Upper Peninsula on the trail of a new job. She finds herself quickly caught up in the mystery of the serial killer, and becomes a deputy state's attorney before solving the case. Jameson: A Louisiana State Trooper who spends his off-hours working a part-time job as a barber in Mackinaw City, and on occasions as a bouncer at a nearby strip club. He initially treats Laura like a friend, but as the story progresses, develops feelings for her. Homer: Jameson's partner, a sergeant in the state police. Dale Mary Beth Vic Susan

Charlie John Development In his introduction to the novel, Carl Hiaasen wrote that the idea for the book arose out of the "spectacularly successful" non-fiction account of a serial rapist and murderer known as "The Pigman", and that he wondered if a novel could be written around this subject. He also reported that he knew of the history of the road from Mackinac Island to Chicago, which had been the topic of a lengthy entry in the
