More than 70 of the world's biggest art museums signed a statement Wednesday calling on countries such as China to respect museum copyright laws to preserve their history of artwork. The call from museums including the Louvre in Paris, the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York, the Prado in Madrid and the Hermitage in St. Petersburg, was made as part of a discussion on the impact of online piracy on art, reported The Guardian.

ADVERTISEMENT "As custodians of some of the most historically important artistic masterpieces, art museums are deeply concerned about the loss of precious, irreplaceable works of art as a result of contemporary technology," said the statement. "Museums around the world have been severely damaged by acts of theft
