My name is Damir.Q: How to get the correct row in tr: hover How do you get the correct td when you hover over the table row? .shopping-info.row: hover td.shop-name a { } A: The td is an element inside the a. So the correct selector is .shopping-info.row: hover a.shop-name { } Note: In your case, it also would make sense to use the class instead of the id as it is more specific. Q: What is the proper way to update my database with data from a form? I have a form that an user fills out. The form needs to save some data to a table, but the problem is, when a user deletes the information and submits it again, it seems to revert to the original information I saved with

it. How do I go about updating my database with this data when a user submits the same information as a different form? How would I be able to detect that it is the same form without having to send a parameter of the form? I'm using CodeIgniter and MySQL (from the CodeIgniter Framework). A: Use the CodeIgniter Form Helper it's easy to write. You can also use other helpers like `load`, `set_value`. Also, you can pass parameters to the form helper or get their value (from session/post/cookie), you can write custom input type. A: assuming that you are using Codeigniter you can do it like that : // first pass the information from the form to a model, // then the model will perform the actual update class MyForm extends CI_Controller { public function updateFormData($formId, $data) { // retrieve all variables form the form // to ensure that the form data is correctly submitted
