This website uses cookies to .Q: Identity users are not being checked against activationUser table I am trying to require a unique username/password combination for a user, this is because one of the secondary records is used by an admin, and it makes it easy for them to manually reset the password for a secondary user, which they won't be able to do if there is a unique username and password combination. I have run into an error where I am having to manually make the secondary user account, and I get this error: The model backing the 'IdentityUser' context has changed since the database was created. Consider using Code First Migrations to update the database. I can't simply click OK, because I don't have access to the server, so I have to manually make the model. I don't know why the are all not being checked against the activationUser table, when I am making a new user? Here is my code: Model public class SecondaryUser : IdentityUser { public string Password { get; set; } public virtual Applicant Applicant { get; set; } } ApplicantDbContext public class ApplicantDbContext : IdentityDbContext { public ApplicantDbContext(DbContextOptions options) : base(options) { } public DbSet Applicants { get; set; } } Register Controller [HttpPost] [AllowAnonymous] public async Task Register(RegisterViewModel model) { if (ModelState.IsValid) { var user = new SecondaryUser { UserName = model.UserName,
