One of the most impactful additions to the player in this release is the ability to hide logos from players without logos. If you're using the default player, the player will populate the logo with default logos when available. If your logo is not available, the player will instead populate with its placeholder logo. An example of this is shown in the screenshot below. New to the 5.3 version of the players are new player logos in the advanced settings. Select logos and drag and drop into the drop-down menu to add a logo. Use the option at the bottom left of the player to hide logos if needed.

Click the three dots at the top right of the player frame and select Include page visit data to track the history of your site visitors in real time. You can then measure visitor behavior and identify what works best by adding the related performance optimizations in the JW Player builder. Open source JW

Player has had a long and vibrant history, and the newly released version of JW Player is no exception to this. In this release, we have made a few enhancements and fixes with a special focus on getting JW Player cleaner and easier to use. To view the full release details, simply click on the link below. JW Player will also be marching back to the free tier! The key feature that separates player from any other mobile-first video player is the ability to control the player on any device in mobile-first mode. While the premium plan is certainly an option for high-end users, if you are looking for a video player that's low cost and easy to consume in any mobile browser, JW Player is the way to go. To help maximize revenue on the free plan, we have taken a couple steps to clean up the product. JW Player now only has 3 styles for free: bottom, top, and side. All style controls are available in the JW Player builder. In the editor, all font sizes are now scalable, and the relative positioning of titles and descriptions will scale according to the containing container.

Looking at the stats on our player, we can see that there are 450,000 active views per week, across 50 languages and countries. If you've been writing a plug-in, or have one in development, keep an eye out for our additions and improvements so you can benefit from your development work. We want to stay ahead of the curve, and that's why we at JW Player are always searching for new ways to advance our media players. In February we will release our next iteration of the JW Player. We will take the player enhancements we've added in the last two years and put them to the test, as well as start a new journey towards making a standalone player. While our current players have been available in mobile and desktop environments for more than eight years, we know that the mobile market is changing and that we need to ensure our JW Player is responsive to this change. More information on the new JW Player will be released on the JW Player Blog early next year. Lastly, we will of course be rolling out mobile and tablet support for JW Player. We've invested in making sure that you don't lose any of your player views, content, and data when you switch from desktop to mobile devices. More information on that is coming soon. Perhaps one of the most important additions of this release is the full HTML5 support. This is the first release we offer a FULL HTML5 video experience where users can switch to a native player on any supported browser that supports HTML5 video. JW Player 8.10 continues this commitment with an out of the box interface for end-users to style captions directly within the player's settings menu. Laws in the United States mandate that certain content providers, such as broadcasters, include captions with all of their videos. Prior to this release, our captions API made it possible to custom build a styler on top of the player, but 8.10 offers a fully supported replacement that saves you time spent building and maintaining your own. We expose all nine FCC compliant attributes and values. 5ec8ef588b
